Majors to Career Clusters Summary – One Year Later

Within one year of graduation (May 2015), the Class of 2014 were exercising the interdisciplinary nature of their academic preparation in career fields that may not have correlated with their major:

- Majors in the Social Sciences and Humanities have the greatest diversity in industry representation, with lines going into every single industry.
- The Arts, Business, and Science witnessed the strongest direct correlation with corresponding industries (Arts and Communications, Business and Finance, and STEM).

Graduates entering the job marketing in May 2014 faced significant challenges. In April 2014, the Economic Policy Institute reported 8.5% unemployment and 16.8% underemployment for graduates between the ages of 22 – 25.

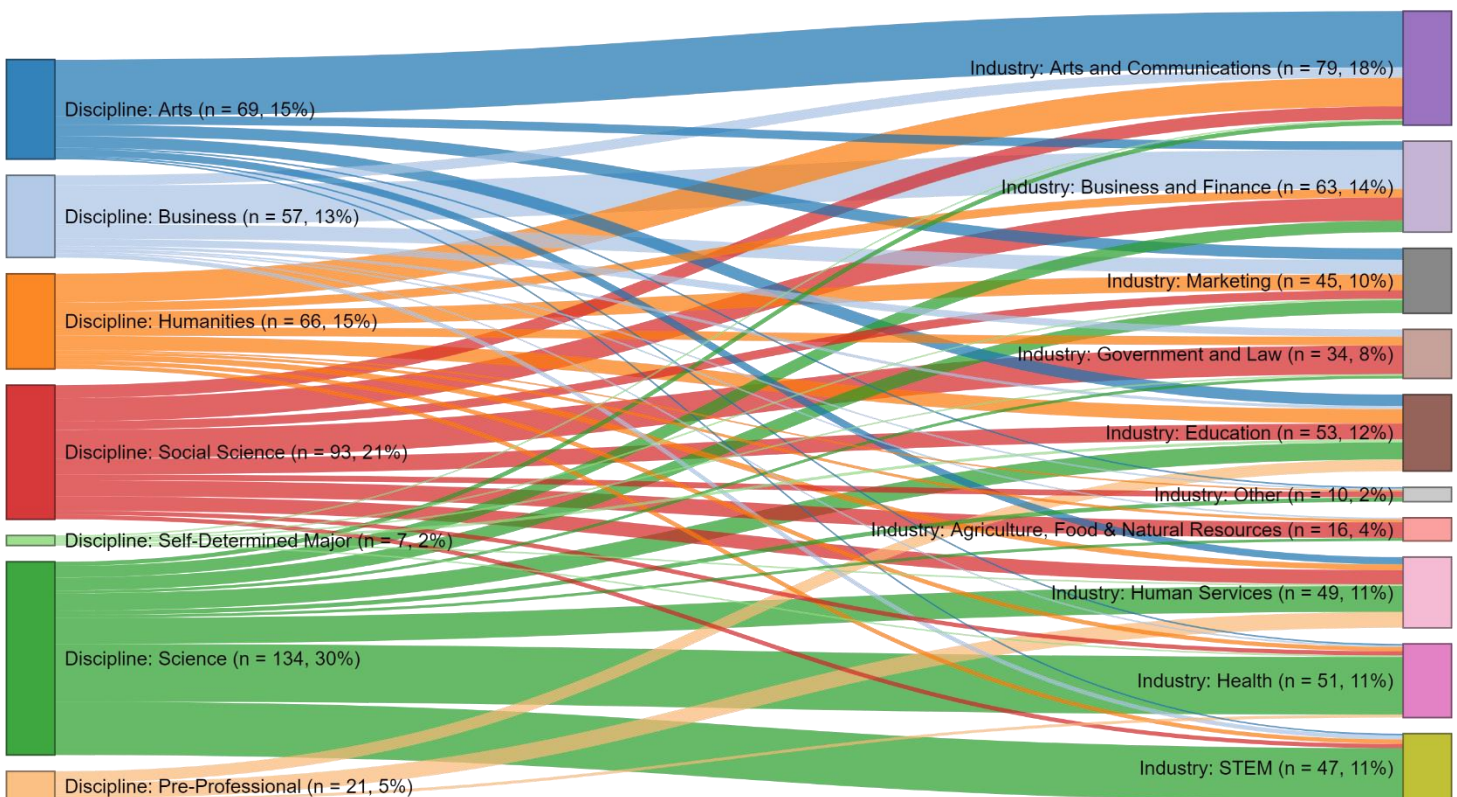

Additionally, in January 2014, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reported 44% of recent graduates with Bachelor degrees were in jobs that did not technically require a degree. Of these types of positions, 40% paid less than $45,000 per year, and 20% paid $25,000 or less.

Given this market, graduates were more likely to accept positions that best aligned with their already cultivated skills sets, hoping to make reasonable wages.

Majors to Career Clusters Summary – Five Years Later

Five years after graduation (May 2019), the Class of 2014 exemplifies mobility in the employment market, boosted by experience and advanced educational credentials (51% of the Class of 2014 completed, or is currently enrolled, in continuing education).

- Majors in Science split into Human Services, Health Science and STEM, boosted by educational credentials. 85% of those in Health Science reported an advanced degree, 71% in Human Services, and 65% in STEM.
- Business majors witnessed increasing representation in Marketing and Arts and Communications. Applicants were enhanced by experience, with 31% of those in Business reported an advanced degree, and 22% in marketing.
- Majors in Humanities and Social Sciences continued to fan into every industry.

Experience and advanced educational credentials allowed graduates to move into their industry of choice and compensation, as opposed to industry of corresponding skill set. Within industries, graduates from 2014 are able to seek out organizations that allow for a sense of purpose and meaning, with values and goals that had better align with their identity.

Gallup reports in “How Millennials Want to Work and Live” (2019) that “Most millennials don’t care about the bells and whistles found in many workplaces today – the ping pong tables, fancy latte machines and free food that companies offer to try to create job satisfaction...Purpose and development drive this generation” (page 3).

Number of Reported Employers since Graduation

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the average college graduate holds 11.7 jobs before the age of 50. A 2016 LinkedIn study demonstrated that the number of company moves among new graduates has increased steadily over the past 30 years. Skidmore graduates have confirmed similar mobility in employment:

- 26% of the Class of 2014 are with the same employer they reported one year after graduation.
- 74% have had more than 1 post-graduate employer:
 - 218 had 3 employers
 - 103 had 4 employers
 - 43 had 5 or more employers since graduation

Gallup found 29% of millennials are engaged at work (emotionally and behaviorally connected to their job and company). Millennials do not want to switch jobs, but companies are not giving them a compelling reason to stay, and when a better opportunity appears, they have every incentive to take it.

This can be misconstrued as millennials wanting more and more, when reality is they just want a job that feels worthwhile, and will continue to look until they find it (How Millennials Want to Work and Live, page 19).

A survey of all positions held by May 2014 graduates from June 2015 – May 2019 found that Arts, Audio/Video Technology and Communications, Education and Training, and Health Science had the greatest number of reported employers:
