In Their Own Words:

"Do it! Seriously. If anthropology classes are what interests you most, then take them. You will graduate a way better reader and writer, you will have gained a ton of knowledge you may never acquire otherwise, and you'll have a better understanding of how our world and its people function. It's awesome, intriguing, and humbling."

Laura Schwecherl, 2010

My senior year of college, I learned the most valuable lesson of my life. I learned that only I can accurately gauge my potential. If you want to follow my path, if you want to share your creative energy for the betterment of many, you must never underestimate what you can accomplish. To truly be an agent of change, you must trust your heart and your vision. As a restorative justice coordinator and the executive director of a nonprofit, I have learned that when you truly trust your creative vision, you will almost certainly surprise yourself every time. You are the energy, the drive, the force you have been seeking. Trust yourself.

Jasmyn Story, 2015

Do not be afraid to try different things. Your career path may not look like you think it will now, and that is a good thing. Test out the "real world" before you decide your future. It may take a few tries, but your passion will come out. And take time off before graduate school – make sure you need it before signing up!

Leslie Finnan, 2008
