In Their Own Words:

If you are given the opportunity to design and conduct a study for your senior thesis, take it. If you want to learn a new skill that's not immediately available (e.g., neuro-imaging), seek it out. Utilize your contacts as much as you can!

If you are hoping to go directly to graduate school, make sure you are confident in what you want to study.

Do not get discouraged if you are overwhelmed by job searches, graduate applications, or another daunting process that you may be faced with before or after graduation from Skidmore.

Alexandra Muratore, 2011

My best advice for performing artists is to get off of the Internet and step into life! Turn off your phone and go out the front door. Remember that you are part of a lineage of an oral and physical tradition that has frankly very little to do with technology. Your craft is passed on from body to body.

Know that technology is a wonderful tool, but it is the connections that you make from human contact and conversations that are going to be most instrumental in your career. And if you can take part in or start an engaging conversation as well as you write a well-crafted email, you are in a fantastic power position.

So, instead of researching a performing arts center in an area you'd like to work in from your computer, just go there and walk around! See "how it feels" to be in that space and talk to the people who work there. Tell them what you want to do and see if you can volunteer in the office or rehearsal room. Make yourself a valuable asset and you will find work in no time in, or close to, your desired field.

Fran Kirmser, 1993
