

PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION

PR 324
Fall 2010

Dr. Joel R. Smith
Skidmore College

An investigation of the fundamental paradoxes of religious belief. Questions to be considered will include the arguments for the existence of God, the problem of suffering and evil, the nature of mystical knowledge, and the rise of modern religious skepticism. We will explore religious skepticism, religious faith, and religious diversity. We will emphasize Western religions, especially Christianity, but will give attention to other Western and Asian religious traditions.

Course Requirements:

1. Participation in class discussion is essential to your learning in this course, and I encourage you to participate in discussions actively.

a. ATTENDANCE IS REQUIRED AT EVERY CLASS (unless you notify me as soon as possible that you must be absent due to medical illness or a religious holiday.) Except for justifiable medical or religious absences, missing even one class will severely damage this component of your grade. The following guidelines express my expectations about attendance and participation:

A or A- = attend all classes and make useful contributions to discussion in nearly every class.

B+ or B = attend all classes and make regular contributions.

B- = attend all classes but seldom speak.

C or D or F = one or more absences no matter how much you talk.

Please don't arrive in class late or leave the room during class unless it is absolutely necessary. (Leaving class is rude and distracts me and other students. It also suggests a lack of concentration or lack of interest on your part.) Please be sure that your cell phone is turned off. Laptop use is not permitted during class unless you have special permission from me.

Your understanding of class discussions, and the quality of class discussion itself, depends on how well you have prepared the reading assignments, so read the assignments carefully. Readings about philosophy and religion are difficult, so I strongly recommend underlining or highlighting passages and outlining or taking notes on the reading. Often you will need to read the assignment, or part of it, more than once. Read actively, not passively, by raising questions and criticisms about the readings.

Note that this course earns four, not three, credits. This means that this course involves considerable more work than a three credit course. Compared to a three credit course, each of our classes will meet an extra 30 minutes longer (1 hour 50 minutes instead of 1 hour 20 minutes). The Skidmore College guideline is that students should study two hours outside of class for every hour of class time. Thus I expect you to spend about 3 1/2 hours preparing for each class, and I have assigned work based on that expectation. I suggest that you work out a study schedule that sets aside a regular 3 1/2 hour period of time to prepare for each class.

b. Study Guides (brief written assignments on the readings) will be due regularly, usually once each week. These will be graded pass/fail. Late Study Guides will not be accepted--have them finished and ready to turn in at the beginning of class.

c. Provocations: Four times during the semester I will ask you to pair up with someone else in class, preferably with someone you don't know. After reading the assignment, you must meet with your partner before class meets and think of at least one point about the reading which you will bring up in class to "provoke" discussion. The point might be a criticism that sparks a controversy, or you could simply raise a question or offer a comment or highlight an important subtle point. Offer a point that goes beyond what the casual reader would normally get from the reading. Make connections to other readings from our course, if possible. Class periods with Provocations are marked P1.1, etc.

d. Progress report on final essay. During our last two classes, everyone will have 10 minutes to discuss the topic of their final essay with the class.

The combination of the above four requirements will count 20% of your final course grade.

2. Two essays (80%): Two essays (due on Monday, October 25 and Wednesday, December 15) will each count 40% of your final course grade. I will provide detailed instructions for each essay later. Each essay must be typed (double-spaced) and about 8-10 pages long.

Eligibility for A or A- and extra credit: To be eligible for a course grade of A or A-, or to earn general extra credit, you must read the following five chapters in Prothero's God Is Not One: Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, and Buddhism. We will probably not have time to discuss any of these during class, but I will try to schedule a brief discussion session for each outside of class, which you must attend to receive credit.  marks the place in the syllabus when you should have read the chapter indicated. These chapters provide a general introduction to the religious traditions that we will be reflecting on philosophically.

There is no final exam for this course.

If you have a learning disability, please let me know as soon as possible.

Skidmore has a strong Honor Code that I will strictly enforce. I will discuss issues about plagiarism when I give you the essay topics. Read the Honor Code section in the Student Handbook about "Academic Policies," as well as the section on "Documentation and Plagiarism" (pp. 46-59) in The Skidmore Guide to Writing."
